

The VW Campmobile. The second car that turns into a second house.

What you see below is a Volkswagen Campmobile.

It's also a cottage by the sea. A cabin in the mountains. And a home on the range.

As well as one of the most practical little cars you can drive.

Like a huge motor home, it can handle your family going across country.

But unlike a huge motor home, your wife can handle it going across town. And you can get away from it all—and get back—on a mere tankful of gas.

Sound good? Then stop by our showroom soon.

And do a little house hunting.

This is the house that Volkswagen built.

This year, we have three different models to choose from. With equipment packages that can accommodate everything from a family of two to two whole families.

Each has all the comforts of home: a double bed, a sleeping hammock, an icebox, a sink, a dining table, and a clothes closet.

Plus options like a pop-up top with an extra double bed, a gas campstove, an electric refrigerator. Even a roomy, attachable tent.

Which means that you can take your vacation wherever you can take your Campmobile.

And that makes for some pretty interesting vacations.

This is the car that comes with the house that Volkswagen built.

Deep within every VW Campmobile there lurks a VW Station Wagon. Just fold away the table. Un-pop the top. And take down the tent.

Presto. Your home has suddenly become your car. And a very special car it is. With seating for five. Eighteen-mile-per-gallon* gas economy. And VW Owner's Security Blanket coverage.

Of course, you can get a VW Station Wagon without the Campmobile equipment. You can also get optional seating for up to nine.

As well as an automatic transmission.

Look into The Campmobile and The Station Wagon. You'll see that there's no place like car.
